A proletarian revolution is a social revolution in which the working class attempts to overthrow the bourgeoisie. Proletarian revolutions are generally advocated by socialists, communists and anarchists. The concept of a revolutionary proletariat was first put forward by the French revolutionary socialist and radical Auguste Blanqui. Marxists believe proletarian revolutions can and will likely happen in all capitalist countries, related to the concept of world revolution.

In less than two weeks, the Grenada revolution had been betrayed, its workers and farmers government overthrown by renegades. Workers and farmers government: Its achievements and its overthrow by Steve Clark
Steve Clark is the managing editor of New International. Amazingly, The New York Times - 22 May 2021 - predicts massive population reduction over the next few decades. "Fewer babies' cries. More abandoned homes. Toward the middle of this century, as deaths start to exceed births, changes will come that..."

From Hungary to China, from Sweden to Japan, governments are struggling to balance the demands of a swelling older cohort with the needs of young people whose most intimate decisions about childbearing are being shaped by factors both positive (more work opportunities for women) and negative (persistent gender inequality and high living costs)." World War I and the Great Depression birthed virulent forms of governments with leaders like Hitler, Mao, Mussolini and Stalin. Yet, governments across America did just that to millions of businesses, workers, and property owners, stripping them of their ability to make a living, or even to engage in a free market of commerce, by shutdown orders, curfews, and stay-at-home orders. The political and professional class ensconced in its work-from-home environs fails to appreciate the hardship this imposes on working people.
